Brunch

- Katie expressed concerns about brunch events:
  - Some people come through the line with giant containers to take a lot of food and then leave with the food immediately, sometimes even when there are empty seats.
  - Organization difficulty: lower frequency, no fixed chairperson
  - Are people still passionate about the brunch events?
- Ayush's response:
  - Typically, there is a lot of leftover food from brunch. No issue with running out of food.
  - Brunch frequency: currently severely understaffed. Every brunch officer should organize about two brunches per year, while all brunch officers help at every event. Not many brunch officers were available at the end of last year, so the workload was especially heavy.
  - The brunch officers are not necessarily frustrated, but overtaxed.
- It could be helpful to collaborate with the Coffee Hour committee.
- The menus are cool but can take a lot of work. Katie suggested that simpler recipes, such as pancakes, eggs and sausages, may reduce the workload. Yung suggested simpler recipes can lead to less excitement for the events.
- The brunch committee agrees there should be people serving the food, but there are not enough officers and volunteers to do that.
- It may be sufficient to have people serving the higher-value food items only.
- Send out an email or survey to gather opinions about the preparation of and the participation in food-related events.

- Mary will reach out to the other brunch officers for opinions next week.
